PREFACE

This module was developed to support the course Research in Education II offered by the Institute of Teacher Education of Davao del Sur State College. It serves as a learning guide for graduate students in completing the essential stages of educational research, particularly in the analysis, interpretation, and presentation of research findings leading to the completion and defense of a thesis manuscript.

The module is designed to provide structured learning experiences that guide students through the processes of data analysis, interpretation of results, writing of summaries, conclusions and recommendations, and the preparation of research manuscripts for final defense. Through a combination of discussions, guided activities, consultations, and independent work, students are expected to refine their research outputs while developing critical thinking, academic writing, and research communication skills.

Aligned with the vision, mission, and core values of Davao del Sur State College, this module promotes scholarly rigor, ethical research practice, and evidence-based decision-making in science education. It also emphasizes the importance of producing research that contributes to improving teaching and learning practices within local and global educational contexts.

This module encourages active engagement, collaboration, and reflective learning among students as they work toward completing their research manuscripts. Ultimately, it aims to equip future educators and researchers with the competencies necessary to generate meaningful knowledge and contribute to the advancement of science education.
